INSIDE THE ENERGY CODE

Stronger, Safer Homes

Hurricane Harvey and Hurricane Irma have devastated large areas of our country. People are without homes, running water, and electric, along with many other basic necessities. With these terrible natural disasters happening, we decided to revisit a report written a few years back for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development on disaster mitigation for home building. Although, you can't completely protect your home from all damage, this mitigation guide allows you to shop for specific disaster mitigation solutions and associated resources. Check out the blog post below and read the Safer, Stronger Homes report!

Also, take a look at our upcoming trainings that are listed below and visit the Home Energy Heroes website often as more trainings are being posted every week.

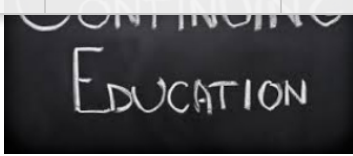

The Home Energy Heroes program recognizes builders and trade contractors who are investing in education and training to stay up to date with the Energy Code, learn new building practices, and help ensure quality, efficient, and durable homes for New Yorkers.
